Finding and keeping good talent – Alberta/Sask. dates

Finding and keeping good talent is a dominant issue with many Saskatchewan organizations for a number of reasons:

- an aging work force (the vast majority are over forty years old)
- increasing retirement rates
- tight labour market
- fast paced changes in the workplace
- limited competitiveness
- four generations in the workforce

Does the aging work force pose staffing issues?

In a tight labour market are you finding it increasingly difficult to recruit?

With an aging work force and a tight labour market is succession planning and retention a concern?

Do you wish your current team were more motivated to achieve needed results?

If you answered yes to any of the questions above, then you should attend our “A Journey to Engagement” presentation. This session has produced amazing results in both public and private sector clients. To learn about this highly effective program, go to www.eddielemoine.com.

What makes “A Journey to Engagement” so effective?

The principles stressed in the “A Journey to Engagement” will help to effect behavioral change in your employees that will directly result in a healthier, happier and more productive team environment.

Keep in mind

The next generation of workers will be able to pick and choose where they work. In a tight labour market with limited competitiveness you can become an employer of choice, able to attract and retain the best talent.
